...Welcome!.....

2019 was a year of profound change at NOFA-VT: our long time director Enid Wonnacott died, a sorrow for the NOFA family and the organic movement as a whole. Yet the heart of our organization remains steadfast: we believe that another food system that values farmers, heals land, and nourishes all people is possible. The farmers and food systems advocates here in Vermont have been working towards this goal for nearly 50 years. We will steward Enid's legacy of building community and connection through place, food, and joy. Enid invested in relationships and stewarded a movement built on connections. This year we learned that our work lives in these relationships. It is all of us who hold the vision we're working toward, all of us in solidarity and community, that will make our work possible.

We know that a robust economy, and healthy community where all are fed is not only possible, it's joyful and necessary. We know that we can only get there together—and that we all have a role to play in taking a step towards a safer, more resilient food system.

Here at NOFA-VT, we'll keep building programs to serve as bridges from the world we have now towards the world we need. We offer our Farmer Emergency Fund to help farms in crisis or need to pivot. We provide technical assistance for folks wanting to grow to feed their communities. We advocate on the state and national levels daily for small and medium scale farmers' voices to be heard and supported. We stand with farmworkers to be supported in the essential work they do, and to have viable paths towards citizenship for all. We raise awareness for eaters and community members about how to grow food. We offer programs like Farm Share that match limited-income Vermonters with CSA shares on local Vermont farms, and Crop Cash to boost dollars in local farmers markets. We throw pizza parties to bring people together to visit beautiful farms, eat together and have a good time! And much more.

We are heartened to know that there are SO MANY other organizations, farmers, and people out there experimenting boldly and vigorously, collaborating like mycelium, and actively forging another path forward.

The future is not written—we are all writing it together.

Grace Oedel
NOFA-VT Executive Director

NOFA-VT works to ensure farm viability and a strong working landscape through education, marketing support, and nurturing strong relationships with farmers. We connect farmers with eaters, and provide education and outreach to teach consumers the true value of food. We bring people together with a spirit of joy, and make friends, one pizza at a time.

The competition has brought out the culinary geniuses in my students and has exposed them to new passions that they didn't know were possible. You can see a change in the confidence they have with decision making, group discussions, and culinary skills. The smiles and the focused eyes are the hallmarks of the true learning that happens during this competition.

Through holistic land stewardship practices, organic farmers build soil health, slow runoff and erosion, and improve overall ecosystem health. Organic farming practices heal land, fight climate change by sequestering carbon into the soil, and make our landscape more resilient in the face of extreme weather.

In 2019, Vermont Organic Farmers certified 775 producers and processors who are committed to soil health, biodiversity, and animal welfare. There were 150,654 acres of certified organic farmland in production. Gross sales of their certified organic products totaled more than $354 million!

We are just farming the way farming was done by our grandparents, they didn't use chemicals. Back then it wasn't called organic, it was just practice. We are following our roots and being good stewards of the earth and trying to instill that to our next generation of farmers who will take over this land. It's healthier for us, the plants, the animals, the water systems, and the planet."*

—Amanda Bickford & Brittany Tarbox,
certified organic farmers at NEK Roots

Meet the 2019 NOFA-VT Journey Farmers! These beginning farmers concluded a two-year program for beginning farmers who are in the first few years of running their own farm business in Vermont. The program supports these farmers and enables them to advance their farming skills and experiences while being a part of a learning community of other beginning farmers and farmer mentors.

Passing Act 35

In 2019, NOFA-VT was part of a dedicated coalition who worked together to champion H.205 (Act 35) in the legislature. Act 35 restricts the use of neonicotinoid pesticides, known to harm pollinator populations and other wildlife, and creates two new positions in pesticide enforcement and pollinator protection at the Agency of Agriculture, Food & Markets. Working with partners like Rural Vermont, Conservation Law Foundation, Toxics Action Center, Friends of the Earth, and the Vermont Chapter of the Sierra Club, we brought in expert testimony to the state house, and collected hundreds of signatures from our members and stakeholders in support of protecting pollinators and restricting the use of toxic pesticides. Act 35 was signed into law on May 28, 2019.

NOFA-VT works to make healthy food accessible for all Vermonters, through programs that support limited-income Vermonters to purchase local foods, and increase access to local foods in cafeterias around the state. Our marketing and outreach efforts grow demand for local and organic foods in order to strengthen our agricultural economy, nourish all Vermonters, and support the expansion of values-based supply chains.

Every Vermonter deserves access to healthy foods.

Below, NOFA-VT's Abbie Nelson, who retired in 2019, is pictured standing, gleaning at Pomykala Farm in Grand Isle, with help from a food services professional. This activity was part of her work with the annual Northeast Farm to School Institute (NEFTSI). The NEFTSI is a project of VT FEED and is a year-long professional development program supporting selected schools from across the Northeast in design, development, and implementation of effective, school-wide Farm to School programs. VT FEED is a partnership between Shelburne Farms and NOFA-VT, which advances food, farm, and nutrition education and expands student access to healthy, local products in school cafeterias.

70 Institutions & schools received technical assistance to align their purchasing with their values and support Vermont farmers

FARM SHARE PROGRAM

The Farm Share Program has enabled my family to not only eat healthy and support local farms, but has also given us a great variety of seasonal choices. The fruit and vegetables are more flavorful and include heirloom varieties. The CSA eliminates the middle-man in the packaging, transportation, and selling of produce, thus lessening the carbon footprint. It also promotes healthy nutrient cycling for the soil. It's a win-win for the farmer, the consumer and the environment.

THE ENID WONNACOTT FUND - Enid led NOFA-VT with grace, humor, and humility for thirty years. She changed Vermont for the better, and created an aspirational model for the rest of our country. What we remember Enid most for, however, is how she brought people together. She cared for people and used food as a tool to build community. She spun a web of connection, support, and relationship that wove together into a broad, strong movement. It's easy to overlook her kindness and care for what it was: a tool for radical changemaking through relationship. Enid left us far too early. The Enid Wonnacott Fund assures that Enid's values and legacy are carried forward into NOFA-VT's next fifty years.
